

Diyarbakır Medical Team Info

The specialties that were particularly requested were:

- primary care (family medicine, pediatrics, internal medicine) - for initial diagnoses and interventions.
- Obstetrics/gynecology.

The camp has a clinic facility that includes an exam room, a treatment room, a two-bed patient room, and a pharmacy/supply room. (see photos below).

Concerning supplies and equipment, the table below provides a general idea.

Concerning medicine, any that can be brought would be appreciated. There is a good supply of medicine currently at the camp.

We will provide translators with an adequate understanding of medical English. We have been told that there are bilingual Kurdish-English speakers at the camp who can help. If these are not available, we can manage with three-way translation: English to Turkish and then Turkish to Kurdish.

We will provide accommodations for the doctors. We are currently working out the details on this.

The security situation there is good. The belediye (local government) is in charge of the camp, and is requesting the medical help. We have visited the camp; it is secure and quite far away (almost 100 miles) from the Syrian border. We expect the doctors to enter on a tourist visa.
